IS INVITED TO TORONTO BY GOBLIN

Author of "Pepys at McGill" to Attend Banquet

MERITS PRAISE

F. H. Walter Responsible for Sustained Humorous Work

The well known humorous magazine of the University of Toronto, "The Goblin," which is holding its annual banquet tonight, has invited to represent McGill, Professor Stephen Leacock and F. H. Walter, author of "Pepys at McGill" and a student of Arts '23.

Professor Leacock has stated that owing to press of work he will be unable to attend. This banquet, while it will be mainly for the staff of "The Goblin," will be attended by representatives from the prominent humorous publications of the United States universities, and promises to be a very distinguished gathering.

It will be well remembered that Professor Leacock was, as he himself expressed it to a "Daily" reporter yesterday, "a foster-father of The Goblin," and is now an honorary editor. He contributed an article to the first number of the publication, written in his characteristic vein of humor redolent with satire. He has kept up his interest in it ever since. "I am very sorry and disappointed not to be able to attend," said Dr. Leacock yesterday, "but I am very busy and cannot get away. All I can do is to send my hearty good wishes, and wish them success."

While the "Daily" is not a humorous publication, F. H. Walter's delightful column, "Pepys at McGill," has apparently been enjoyed and appreciated at Toronto as much as it has been at McGill. The invitation received by Walter intimated that it was because of this work that he had been asked to attend the banquet.

While Walter has never signed his name to the "Pepys at McGill" that is printed in the "Daily," it is now generally known that he is the author of it. It is also generally acknowledged that he is deserving of much credit and praise for its sustained humor.

He has been writing "Pepys at McGill" for upwards of four or five months now, and only occasionally, if at all, has it lapsed from its usual high standard of excellence set by the first few numbers. The chief element in "Pepys at McGill" which attracted attention on its inception was the close resemblance to the famous diary of the original imitator Samuel Pepys. It is highly gratifying that Walter's work should have thus been recognized.

Doing, Fredericks, of Commerce, the manager for "The Goblin" at McGill, also received an invitation, but is unable to go.

MACDONALD WINS AGAINST WHITES

McGill Whites Defeated by 14-4 Score

After a hard-fought and exciting game played last evening at Macdonald College, the McGill Whites were forced to accept defeat at the hands of the Macdonald students in a scheduled game of the City and District Indoor Baseball League.

A bad beginning on the part of the McGill team and the wonderful pitching of Skinner of Macdonald were the main reasons for their defeat. Twelve of the fourteen runs amassed by the students were collected in the first innings, while Skinner held the Whites to only four runs, most of these being scored on scattered hits.

After getting away to such a bad start, the White team played well together and allowed only two runs in the remaining five innings. Philpotts at this time was pitching winning ball and the remainder of the team giving him air-tight support.

The teams lined up as follows:
McGill Whites Macdonald
Catcher
Peacock Dimmock
Pitcher
Philpotts Skinner (c)

EXAM. BLUES CHASED AWAY BY DANCERS

Joy Killed Gloom at the Final Informal

GREAT SUCCESS

Fine Music, Good Refreshments, Wonderful Gowns

"Last but not least," was the unanimous judgment passed on last night's Informal Dance by all who attended, and though this year's Informals have been of a very high standard, the final of the series was at least equal to, if not better than, the preceding ones. Although the grim spectre of dread examinations desperately attempted to fill with fear the hearts of the sons of McGill, it miserably and utterly failed. The students showed their utter contempt for the coming events and they and their partners enjoyed themselves to the "nth" degree, a light and joyous mood being prevalent in all minds from the first sob of the saxophone to the last and dying chord of the farewell waltz.

To attempt to enter into the field of description, in connection with this, is a dangerous thing to do, but it must be done.

The music, which was supplied by the ever-popular McGill Dance Orchestra, was, as usual, above criticism and with a good floor, it was undeniably impossible to keep from dancing. Fox trots were predominant on the program but waltzes, judging by the enthusiastic applause, are still very popular with the followers of the terpsichorean art. The refreshments, which were served in the most satisfactory manner, reached the usual Informal standard.

In spite of the undermining and subtle Spring fever, the male garb did not show any radical change or color, being of the usual staid cut and sombre hue, but this cannot be said regarding the garments of the fair sex. To try to convey the impression caused by the multi-colored and individualistic gowns in cold, inflexible and prosaic phrasing is impossible—the English vocabulary has not a large enough range. Color mingled with color, lighter shades blending synthetically with the darker and producing, in the totality, an effect that defies description. No more can be said, as far as this is concerned, and only an extraordinary imagination can create even a weak reproduction of the reality.

The patronesses for this delightful occasion were Mrs. Whitnall, Mrs. H. Lamb, Mrs. E. Brown and Miss Hurlbatt.

Among those who attended were Dr. Whitnall, Professors H. M. Lamb and E. Brown and the Misses Parkinson, D. Teggart, G. Robinson, I. Scott, E. Howard, F. Depprose, M. Russell, J. Collins, T. Bruneau, E.

SECRETS OF ENERGY IN THE ATOMS

Dr. Aston Delivered Second Lecture on Isotopes

LARGE AUDIENCE

New Light on Fundamental Theories of Chemistry

That scientists are at last becoming acquainted with the mechanics of the energy locked within the atom and with the vast quantity of power confined within that minute space, was the statement made last night by Dr. F. W. Aston in his second and final address delivered before the Physical Society upon the subject of "Isotopes."

In his second lecture, Dr. Aston resumed his explanation at the point where he had left it at the close of his former address. He described the extremely delicate apparatus which he used to separate the two isotopic forms of Neon, and explained with the use of diagrammatic lantern slides the construction and manipulation of the mass spectrograph which was employed in the detection of isotopes by means of spectroscopic photography. For each atom of different weight possessed by an element a separate line of the spectrum is shown.

By means of this instrument it was found that a great many of the well-known elements were composed of atoms which varied in weight and were therefore called isotopes. As an example of the careful research work which Dr. Aston has been carrying on at Cambridge, and the uses to which such effort may be applied, it may be stated that he was able to correct an error in the established atomic weight of boron, and arrived at a new value which has recently been verified by experiment at Harvard.

The explanation which was given by Dr. Aston of the cause of isotopes formed perhaps the most interesting part of his lecture. It is wholly a question of atomic structure. The nucleus of the atom is composed of electrons or negative particles and of positive particles called protons. The positive charge in the nucleus predominates, and is counterbalanced by the negative electrons revolving around the nucleus. All the chemical properties of elements and compounds depend only upon the number of electrons that circle the nucleus, while the atomic weight of elements depends only upon the number of protons and electrons in the nucleus. It is thus possible for three outer electrons, for example, to balance any number of positive and negative charges in the nucleus between the number of which there is a difference of three, and the chemical properties of substances will thus remain the same although the atomic weights may be different.

DEMONSTRATION OF GYM WORK AT R.V.C.

Great Attraction March 31st and April 1st

To those who have been sadly reflecting that college activities for the year are almost at an end, the R.V.C. gymnastic and dancing demonstration will come as a pleasant surprise. This demonstration is to take place on the evenings of March 31 and April 1, and it is rumored that the event will surpass all previous ones of its kind.

The R.V.C. gymnasium is now the centre of endless activity, and the "tramp, tramp, tramp of marching feet" may be heard therein throughout the day. The official program of the "dem" will be published in a few days. In the meanwhile suffice it to say that the attractions offered will be many and varied.

Have you ever seen a "Macedonian Counter March" in action? Here is your chance to see it done in the most approved style. Figure Marching will be a feature of the demonstration, and if constant drilling is any guarantee of perfection, some snappy work may be expected.

For those who are fond of aesthetic dancing there will be several charming numbers with such tempting titles as "Columbine Chooses" and "Echoes of Spring." Those who prefer a more strenuous form of exercise will be thrilled to watch the R.V.C. athletes soar over the horse, exhibiting vaults of the most complicated variety.

ATHLETIC AWARDS

The agitation started this year for the addition of more of the college athletic organizations to the list of the major sports is only a new phase of a problem that has confronted the executive of the Athletic Association for many years. The minor clubs do not want to attain the status of major sports as much as they wish to secure the honor of attaining the major letters for their athletes. The problem is not one that is confined to McGill, as a similar discussion is taking place at many of the other universities in both Canada and the United States.

The question of deciding which of the team, or whom among the students, shall be granted the major letters for their athletic prowess brings up an additional query as to the reason why such letters should be granted at all. The Athletic Association decreed some time ago that only the men who made the required standard in track, football, or hockey could be granted the big "M" and definite rules were laid down concerning these requirements.

The main argument brought forth by the minor clubs in search of greater honors has been that the amount of application and science required by the members of their clubs is as great as that needed by the students engaged in the sports classed as major at the present time. In their statements of fact they are no doubt correct, but it is doubtful if these statistics have any bearing on the problem. If effort expended was the criterion by which such matters were judged there would be no doubt about the injustice of the present system; there are other viewpoints to be considered, however.

The "M" has always been highly prized by the men fortunate enough to be granted it largely because of the fact that very few of them were won by the students. It was considered a mark of high athletic prowess. It is an undoubted fact that the value of the latter would be decreased if it was granted indiscriminately to the men competing in every branch of athletics.

The present system of making the awards is certainly open to criticism from every point of view; nevertheless, it has been very successful considering the narrow limits within which the Athletic Association executive had to work in deciding upon the men who were entitled to the insignia. There have been very few instances where men entitled to letters did not get them, or of students being granted the "M" when they were not entitled to it. There have, however, been some cases where the narrowness of the rules concerning the insignia have caused injustice to outstanding athletes.

If any changes are to be made in the constitution of the Athletic Association concerning the granting of insignia to the students, it is quite possible that the best plan would be to make it still more difficult to gain the letter. As a mark of outstanding ability in athletics, the letter should only be given to men who have distinguished themselves during their undergraduate days. This should apply to the minor as well as the major branches of athletics.

Track, hockey, and football should be given the preference over the other sports both from the historical point of view and the position they hold in present day athletics. It is possible that the letters could be given to even a smaller number of men in these branches of athletics than is the case at the present time. In other branches of sport, the big "M" should be granted to outstanding athletes.

The only difficulty that could arise under such a system lies in the fact that there would be no definite rules by which the Athletic Association could judge the ability of the men. Certain requirements could be stated before the executive would be allowed to even consider granting the letters, however, and, with these requirements fulfilled, the executive could then proceed to consider whether or not the performance of the men merited the high award. As an added precaution against too numerous awards, a supervising board composed of prominent graduates might be secured to give added consideration to the decisions of the students.

Any suggestions given at the present time must be in the nature of generalities but it does seem that the most successful plan would be to restrict rather than increase the number of awards. Careful consideration should be given to whatever plans are brought forth as it is a matter that should be definitely settled for the future. Frequent changes in methods would only tend to make the whole system unsatisfactory.

LAST LECTURE IN POLITICS COURSE

"Survey and Characterization of Policies"

The search for the moral absolute has been the basis of all political struggles. Such was the theme of the last lecture of the extension course on Politics which was given yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Chipman, who has but recently recovered from a severe attack of laryngitis, was unable to give the lecture, but Mr. Hankin read the manuscript prepared by his colleague.

"Force," said the lecturer, "is not the basis of sovereignty. The peace of the state depends not upon force but upon the spiritual sanction of the community."

The sanction of the community is, if the selfishness of the individual can be disregarded, given only to actions which they consider right. A thing which is right in the consideration of one man may be far from right in the eyes of his neighbor, and it is these differences of opinion, these different ideas of the ideal state that can only be achieved in one way, that have been responsible for all political struggles.

The story of the search for the ideal is the story of western civilization. It played its part in Greece and Rome. It was behind the causes of the French Revolution and the constitutional development of England.

Some people maintain that the time of party politics is passing, but it can not pass until everyone is assured that the aim of justice and order has been achieved. That such a state of affairs is far distant is fairly obvious when one considers the widely divergent conceptions of the functions of the ideal state.

In summarizing the lecturer said that the course had been an attempt to determine what is the sovereignty to which we should bow. There is some ultimate claim and it is everyone's duty to attempt to find it, and when it is found every action must be judged by it. The perfect law of liberty finds expression in the Golden Rule.

In concluding the course the lecturer expressed his gratification at the interest which had been shown. It had been the experiment of two amateurs but they would long remember with gratification the series of gatherings.

The audience gave voice to their gratitude to the lecturer in a hearty round of applause.

One of the most astounding and far reaching discoveries that has been investigated in connection with isotopic phenomena is the fact that when charges are added to atoms, their nature being thus changed, there is found to be a loss of weight. Matter has disappeared. According to Einstein's Theory of Relativity, matter is nothing but energy. In this loss of matter is found the explanation for the vast store of energy within the atom. There is as much energy, said the lecturer, in the atoms in a glass of water as in Niagara.

The address concluded on a note of warning. If this boundless store of energy should ever be successfully tapped it might prove uncontrollable. In such a case the experiment which should be successful in liberating it would be published throughout the universe by the flaming creation of a new star.

Upon the conclusion of his address, Dr. Aston was greeted with prolonged applause by a large audience, and after discussion the meeting adjourned.

PEPYS AT MCGILL

Friday, March 24th.—All at a loss this day at a sudden kindness done me at the hands of certain of the Puritans out of Toronto, which is a town in a province near to which these colleges are, and which I found to be so utterly bereft of liquors when I did journey thither for the playing of a game at football between the men of our colleges and theirs. Now it seems that there be certain among them there who do print forth a sort of comique sheet, and they intending shortly to have a sort of banquet at their quarters in this town of Toronto did bethink them to ask me to partake of their viands, and such choice of harmless brews as the poor folk of that place be given leave to drynke, and truly I am not a little troubled that I should in times past have spoken hardly of these men, for it doth appear that they are right hospitable and kindly in all things. So after my wearisome discourses in the afternoon down to Saint Catherine Street there to purchase myself a new pair of shiny new gloves made out of a kyd's hide the better to uphold the dignity of my rank, for I have a secret presentiment that my company is desired chiefly for the éclat that one of my rank and birth would give to such a gathering. Also to pay a hurried visit to a certain emporium of our free-hearted Government upon the street called Peel.

Mrs. Nexdoor—"I have found out one thing about that Mrs. Nexcomer. Whoever she is, she has never moved in good society."

Mr. Nexdoor—"How do you know that?"

Mrs. Nexdoor—"She shakes hands as if she meant it."

Father (building a hen-house)—"Tommy, take this new saw back to the shop and tell him to return the money. The saw is absolutely blunt."

Tommy—"But father, surely you must be mistaken. Why, I have sawed a brick in two with it this morning, and it cut fine."

PICTURE ON A BONE CLUE TO EARLY MAN

Engraving Resembling Mastodon Found in Mountains

Mammoths, mastodons or elephants may have been roaming around this continent as late as 3,000 years ago and American Indians then or earlier might have seen them and sketched them, according to Dr. Clark Wissler, curator of the American Museum of Natural History, who has studied the bone relics found at Jacob's Cavern in the Ozark Mountains, near Pineville, Mo., where an engraving on a bone resembling a big tusked animal was found in April of last year.

The "mastodon" picture was discovered by Jay L. H. Taylor, a civil engineer, who picked up a large bone while he was scooping out a basin to wash his hands. A hole in one end like that for passing a loop through a policeman's club attracted his attention. When the bone had been washed, there appeared to be a crude sketch cut into it. Several other perforated and notched bones were found. The one which attracted particular attention was the "mastodon" picture. The prevailing belief had been that the mastodon disappeared from this continent many thousands of years ago. It had never been shown that man existed on this continent at the same time with any of the great mammals.

The sketch was not of the splendid artistic workmanship which marks the incised ivories and bones in French and Spanish caves where sketches were engraved with an exactness and freedom which cannot be surpassed by artists of today.

Might Have Been an Indian

It was not even a certainty that the sketch in Jacob's Cavern was intended for a mastodon or a similar animal, but the bulky rounded form and sweeping curved tusk might have been accidentally so drawn by an Indian artist intending to represent something.

The discovery was kept a secret among scientists for several months for the reason, Mr. Taylor explains in Natural History, the journal of the American Museum of Natural History, that he thought it might be a hoax and might subject him to ridicule. This was made unlikely by the discovery of similar relics embedded in the floor and sides of the cave, some of which were dislodged by dynamite—a method abhorred by professional archaeologists because it destroys more than it reveals.

After visiting the cave and making a study of these relics at the invitation of Mr. Taylor, Dr. Clark Wissler wrote to him as follows:

"The question your find raises is whether the person who made the sketch on the bone that has been preserved saw a mastodon or a mammoth. This cannot be answered positively, but the probabilities of the case can be estimated.

"In the first place, the work is of the primitive stamp and such as we might expect from the hand of an American native. It so happens that upon these bones at least three attempts were made to represent living forms, apparently by the same artist. Two of these forms have the distinctive lines of elk and deer, while the lines of the third characterize elephant kind. This favors the interpretation that an elephant, mastodon or mammoth was intended.

Could Have Been Great Mammal

"At once the objection will be raised that the bone is recent. Though the mastodon and the mammoth are characteristic of Pleistocene time, it is not known when they became extinct; for all that is known to the contrary these great mammals may have held out to within three thousand years ago. Thus, the artist could have seen one of these animals and still have lived under modern conditions. No one in authority seems now prepared to deny that man was in America three thousand years ago. In other words, there is nothing zoological that makes your interpretation improbable. We must, therefore, turn to the cave itself.

"I appear that this bone was found in the present surface of the cave, but approximately five feet of deposit were taken out by Moorehead in 1903; hence, this bone is older than anything found by him. When we recall that both Peabody and Moorehead were impressed with the great age of what they removed, the evidence is again favorable to your interpretation. Also, there are still in the cavern five feet of deposit, in the main clay, through which you were so kind as to sink a shaft in my presence.

"The excavation indicated the presence of man's handiwork in all parts of this deposit, one piece of worked stone being found at the very bottom of the shaft, laying flat upon the original stone floor of the cavern. One must conclude, therefore, that there are remains in the cavern that are of even greater age than the bone in question.

"In general, then, I regard this site as one of the most important yet discovered, and one demanding further investigation. Regardless of what may ultimately prove to be the significance of this carved bone, you have made a discovery of great promise. I assure you of my appreciation of your confidence in extending an invitation to make further excavations in this deposit and its surroundings.

"So, pending the examination of the site, as indicated above, no further comment seems necessary. The writer will do everything he can to further this investigation, to the end that the complete story of Jacob's Cavern may be revealed. It is to be hoped that at last we are on the trail of early man in America."

The Editor, McGill Daily.

Dear Sir:—The year is drawing to a close. The Canadian Club of McGill has had one meeting. It is probable that such constitutes and concludes its activity for this term. Whether or not greater activity could have been manifested by the club it is not my intention to consider. Possibly the executive met with serious difficulties in securing speakers of sufficiently exalted standing to address the members of the Canadian Club, in which case the executive is to be commended for at least attempting greater things. It is just possible that the fact that the executive was not installed in office until the fall contributed to lessen their opportunities to secure for the Club a more active season. Hence it would seem advisable to have the officers for the ensuing college year selected this spring—and time now is hastening on—so that they may prepare to ensure for the Canadian Club more of that active and essential place in the student life of McGill University which is beyond doubt its due.

Yours truly,
R. K. JONES, Arts '23.

OTHER COLLEGES

The Canadians who boxed Navy last Saturday furnished some of the best examples of good winners; as well as game losers, that the Regiment has seen for some time. Fighting in strange territory, against unknown opponents, they put into their fights all that they had, and, win or lose, they took it in perfect good grace. The winners were pleased at the decisions, of course, but not unduly so. The losers put in everything they had, but did not kick against the result. The Canadians left the Academy with great praise for the institution and their treatment by the Regiment, on account of the interest in entertaining them shown by the Regiment in general, and the attitude of the spectators and the team on Saturday afternoon.—The Log of the U.S. Naval Academy.

While he was sailing down the Clyde River in the yacht Erin, Sir Thomas Lipton says that he was held up by an ancient and dirty manure barge, the only occupant of which was a grimy man smoking a short, black pipe.

Finding that the fellow did not make any effort to get out of the way, the officer on the bridge of the yacht shouted at him in true nautical style. At that, the man rose slowly, stretched himself, removed his pipe from his mouth and then asked:

"An' is it yerself that's captain of that ship?"

"No," was the reply, "but I'm the chief officer."

"Then talk to yer equals, my man," retorted the grimy-faced bargeman with infinite condescension. "Sure, I'm the captain of this one."

THE TIMES HAVE CHANGED

The times have changed in many ways.

The styles and manners too.
Since good Lord Chesterfieldian days,
When gallantry rang true.

But closer still—within ten years—
Has passed a nobler age.

When gentlemen, so it appears,
Were really quite the rage.

The hats those days were very prim,
Most tediously blocked.

And if one mite was out of trim,
Society was shocked.

And yet, when'er fair maid appeared,
All thoughts of style were downed;

Each man his dome of head-wear cleared.

And bowed it to the ground.

Such was the case ten years ago;
Since then the times have changed.

And styles have had an awful blow,
While fells are now deranged.

Today, hats must be banged or crushed.

Or they are not worth while;

The more they're pressed and tramped and mushed.

The more they are in style.

Yet at this time when men could touch

Their hats and give no hurt,
A nod, and often not that much,

Salutes a passing skirt.

We wonder if the rule holds tight,
Or if 'twas just a whim.

That men were so much more polite
When they were much more trim?

—Univ. of Michigan Daily.

THE LONG- SUFFERING STUDENT

Midst a flood of attack upon the college student of today, the Dartmouth comes boldly to his support, venturing the opinion that he is not nearly as bad as his critics make out, and even going so far as to say that he as a type is improving in intellectual interests, standards of value, and morals. Of course there is a great deal of truth in what the Dartmouth has to say, just as there is much truth in what the critics say against the college student. The undergraduate has many good qualities and many shortcomings; of see either to the exclusion of the other is a mistake.

Says the Dartmouth: "Ask the men who flunked out this semester whether their parents are satisfied because they made the best fraternity, dressed well, made friends—and flunked out."
The answer is that bustling—as we call it here—is often a wholesome jolt to the student who has had his eye fixed on "getting by." The need of passing the required hours is too frequently a necessary evil accompanying a pleasant college life. When a student busts he realizes too late that his standards of value have been wrong.

It is such things as this that the valiant defender of the college student is likely to overlook. The critic who asserts that the undergraduate is all bad is equally blind to the facts. But a dozen students err by being too self-satisfied to every one who goes to the opposite extreme. We may expect a fair share of honest praise and of honest censure, but we shall benefit more by the latter.—Cornell Daily Sun.

The preservative powers of borax was first discovered by a prospector in Yellowstone Park, it is said. He came across the body of a horse, which, although it had died long before, was perfectly whole and preserved and covered with a layer of fine dust, which proved to be borax.
He took advantage of his discovery and sold his secret to a packing firm.

AT THE THEATRES

THE PRINCESS.

A particularly attractive bill of vaudeville headliners has been provided for the patrons of the Princess Theatre next week. Charles "Chic" Sale and Harry Carroll two of vaudeville's foremost headliners, will be the outstanding features of the program.

Harry Carroll and His Company will be seen in "Varieties of 1922," one of the most elaborate revues ever staged for vaudeville, every detail being of highest order and the most pleasing and handsomely staged production of its sort. As a composer vaudeville and musical comedy favorite, Harry Carroll stands without any comment, his ability in both lines being well known. Supporting him in his new offering are the dainty Bennett Twins, Tom Dingle, Patsy Delaney and the fast-stepping, frolicking "Six Slick Chicks."

There is probably not another man on the vaudeville stage who has given so much time and study to the preparation of the act he is presenting as Charles "Chic" Sale. For the past two seasons he has been contributing his rural characters to the musical comedy stage and at intervals in vaudeville and has since added many new bits to his repertoire. Sale does not depend on make-up, the art of facial expression has been perfected and is one of the principal factors of his success. In every character he presents the expression is different. Many artists burlesque such characters as Sale uses, but none have been able to portray them so faithfully and naturally, or to get as much genuine comedy out of them as he does. He brings to us this season his offering entitled, "The Rural Sunday School Entertainment." His comedy is clean, natural and of a style which places him in a class by himself as an entertainer.

"Thank You, Doctor," is an amusing sketch with bright, clever dialogue, clean, wholesome comedy and a really surprising and hilarious climax. Billy Frawley and Edna Louise, two clever vaudevillians, who possess ability and personality, will be seen in "It's All a Fake," in which there is a thread of a story, clever situations, smart dialogue and songs.

Jason and Harrigan, vocalist and pianist, offer a program of delightful classical and popular melodies. The Melotte Duo are clever gymnasts who will be seen in a sensational unsupported ladder and wire offering. Miss Bessye Clifford is a model who presents a series of poses, reproducing famous art studies and "Tours of the World" with Burton Holmes showing "The Sentence of Sario" complete the program.

THE ORPHEUM.

Out of compliment to Miss Margaret Knight, leading lady of the Orpheum Players, the management have secured the right to play in Montreal "The Triumph of N," not yet released for stock, but one in which Miss Knight made a hit when the play had its Broadway production. The piece is one of the most powerful dramas of the day. The unknown quantity is a power of the human mind which is not recognized by the sciences. It may make itself present in various ways. This time it is done in a woman's love for a man who, when she was a girl, she had worshipped as a father. It is a foe of both heredity and environment and its triumphs over these two has been dramatized by Carlos Wupperman in his four-act drama. "The Triumph of N" (played by Miss Knight) is depicted out in the world fighting to cure her cravings. She wins at last and returns to her guardian's home from which she had fled to save him from himself and bring a rainbow of joy to the two lives over which clouds had hung. A new play and one which is the strongest yet presented this season. It will make the Orpheum indeed a place of interest next week.

THE ALLEN.

Among the more popular actresses of the motion picture screen, Miss Norma Talmadge occupies a privileged place. Her remarkable versatility as revealed in the range of her histrionic work, and the intelligent reading she gives to unusual girl types combine to make any picture in which she may appear of more than average interest. Next week she will be featured at the Allen Theatre in her latest production which is entitled "Love's Redemption." In brief, this is the story of a fire-fly on a forgotten island, and concerns a girl named Jennie Dobson, but known as "Ginger," who is the orphaned child of a Spanish operatic artist and a wealthy English gentleman. The scene is laid in Jamaica, and "Ginger" is portrayed as a girl of rare charm and keen mentality, whose ability to handle the natives is remarkable. She undertakes the reformation of an outcast Englishman, called Clifford Standish, who has ruined himself by association with card sharps and drunkards. The story of his regeneration is told on the screen with dramatic detail and considerable emotional strength and constitutes a tale of compelling interest in which Miss Talmadge accomplishes some very effective work.

So popular has proved the engagement of Miss Viva Daron, the brilliant prima donna of "The Maid of the Mountains," that she has been retained for another week, during which period she will sing selections from "The Maid of the Mountains," in which she first won her Canadian public. An attractive scenic and the customary weekly features will conclude the bill.

THE LAST STRAW

Farewell, Myrtilla We must part,
As cruel fate foretold,
You to pursue your newer art,
I to lament the old.
I see you flick your cigarette
To mask, perhaps, some slight regret.
In early days, a clinging vine,
You wreathed my stalwart form
With tenderness I thought divine,
Caresses shyly warm.
You helped me with my overcoat,
Arranged the muffler at my throat.
Your costumes then your figure graced,
Depending fold on fold,
Their flowing lines correctly chaste.
Antithesis of old,
Now, with your bloners, knicks and tweeds,
Your "gowns" set us strange occult creeds.
I stood it when my cigarettes
Began to disappear.
A philosophic mind begets
A certain calm austere.
Even when you "borrowed" ties and socks
With manly pluck I bore the shocks.
But now, however keen the pain,
I make my final stand.
I've yielded time and time again,
Yet shameless you demand
My golfing hose for "winter wear,"
And that is more than I can bear!

COLLEGE HUMOUR
HARDLY RAPPEDRebuke Administered for Low Moral Tone

Under the caption, "The Decline of College Humor", the current issue of Henry Ford's "Dearborn Independent" carries the following:

"If it is true that the students of Northwestern University have protested against the quality of humor served up in college publications, they have started something which should go the round of the universities. A recent survey of publications from colleges in all parts of the country—a survey made for other than editorial purposes—disclosed a most surprising paucity of clean humor and a dirty deluge of the most disgusting form of acute primary moral dementia precox. The spirit of college fun seems utterly to have departed, and the dregs set up in its place. Cleverness in writing around the type of salacious and suggestive vulgarity has taken the place of the wild exuberance of imagination, the perfectly irresponsible riot of wholesome spontaneity, which marked college journalism in its prime.

It is rather a humiliating discovery to make. Many people who imagine that they know what the ruling spirits of the campus are thinking about would do well to gather up a dozen of the student publications, and hold a clinic on them. Thoughtful people are justly perturbed by the disappearance of sympathy and understanding between the social groups now bearing collegians, there is in some of our college publications a lack of breeding, taken as an indication, the rift between the campus and society is one calling for more particular attention.

Making all allowances for the rickety mental support of youth, and for the devil-take-it attitude of very young collegians, there is in some of our college publications a lack of breeding, yes, of yokel wholesomeness, yes; even of a polite libertine's regard for decent appearances, which would rouse the protest of parents if those publications ever reached the student's homes, and should have brought the action of college authorities long ago.

LAW COURSE FOR WOMEN

A course in law that will give the woman in the home and the woman in business a general understanding of the principles of law, in order that she may handle her business and her personal affairs is to be added to the "School of Business and Civic Administration" of the College of the City of New York. The lectures are not intended to prepare women for admission to the bar, but it is hoped that the students will be given insight into legal regulations and procedure and an understanding of the necessity for competent advice when difficulties do arise.

Miss Helen Elizabeth O'Brien, LL.B. who will be in charge of the work, in outlining the course, said that very few women even understood the nature of a contract and so enter into agreements that are unwise.

"I have found that in the education of almost every woman," said Miss O'Brien, "there has been a missing link—instruction in general law whereby they may be able to solve the problems that confront them in their daily lives. It is because of this imperative need in the life of every woman that this course has been planned and introduced by the Faculty of the college so that through a knowledge of the principles of general law women may know and protect their personal rights.

"Few women understand the necessity for insurance and the legal principles that govern insurance contracts. The bank with its notes and checks is a bewildering mystery which nevertheless plays an important part in the life and should be understood. Women as a rule do not know enough about the leases and mortgages that affect their home security and many of them are not even aware of the way property descends by will."

The topics to be covered by the course are the general nature of law, the necessity for law, how laws arose, how they developed; the present method by which one individual makes agreements with another, how contracts or agreements may be made in a legal manner, and how they are enforced by the State; the status of women as competent makers of contracts under the law and the part a woman may play as an agent.

Notes, checks, promissory notes, bills of exchange and other papers will be explained. The students will be told how title to property is obtained, how it may be lost and how it may be voluntarily transferred to some one else. A general discussion of the relations between landlord and tenant and the reciprocal rights and obligations of each will be a feature of the course, while the laws governing commercial interests and investments and how women should invest their funds and legally safeguard these investments, even though the investment be but a small deposit in the savings bank, will be explained.

Insects of the United States destroy $1,100,000,000 worth of farm produce a year, according to reports.
